Consider the Benefits

Most people know the benefits of a good education. Do you like to learn? Have you ever thought about learning music, or providing that opportunity for someone in your family? Studying piano and music, even for a short time, has significant benefits:

Intellectual development: Scholars have known for years that piano instruction enhances math skills and academic potential, and improves the brain's abilities for spatial-temporal reasoning.

Discipline: As in sports, you must practice regularly to advance in music. Students learn that practice brings improvement.

Commitment: You don't learn to play piano overnight. That takes sustained effort and time. Students learn the value of commitment.

Good musical base: Piano is a great foundation for just about any instrument. Start with piano and you'll be able to quickly transfer your knowledge to other instruments.

Social skills: Lessons provide opportunities to participate in group work which will foster teamwork skills and develop friendships.
